Geography of Human Conflict: Approaches to Survival

By Neville Brown

Sussex Academic Press. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Geography of Human Conflict: Approaches to Survival, Neville Brown, This book is mindful of Geographys big dilemma. How can the subject curb the encroachments of other disciplines: environmental studies, human ecology, political science, geophysics.? The author believes that what we know as 'strategic studies' needs urgently to address a clutch of geography-related considerations customarily seen as outside its remit. Climate change is of singular import, security-wise. Moreover, other pressures on our planetary ecology and resource base, currently appear as critical, taken collectively. Societal and philosophic contradictions are deeply endemic, too, not least within the modern post-industrial nations. Again the attendant security implications may lend themselves well to geographical interpretations. Informing the study throughout will be an awareness of the interactions between Space and Time, addressed not metaphysically but in mundane terms. Then again, while linear distance and bearing are becoming less crucially important, the two-dimensional aspects of geographic space (areas and densities) are becoming more critical. Germane, too, is the medium-term (20 to 30 years?) prospect of biowarfare displacing nuclear bombs as the most menacing form of mass destruction. The classical Chinese concept of yin and yang will be examined as...
