Every page of the enactments of Congress and the various state legislatures bear evidences of paternalism. CENTRALIZATION. Prior to the Civil War the average citizen hardly realized that we had a government at Washington, in so far as the action of that government affected his daily life. National and international affairs concerned him but little. His chief concern was with domestic and local affairs and these fell almost exclusively within the province of the state and local governments. The Civil War changed all that. During the last half century the national government has occupied an ever increasing proportion of public attention and public interest. National legislation and national administration have touched the people at every point. All eyes are directed upon Washington....
