Be off at once, and don t pollute this house any longer with your presence! And before she knew where she was, Mariquita found herself on the stairs, and the door of her former home closed upon her for ever. Aunt Luisa acted on the impulse of the moment, without giving herself time for reflection, otherwise it can hardly be supposed that she could have turned a young girl out at night into the streets, with no refuge to go to. A great sense of desolation came over Mariquita. Oh, tia, let me in! Only let me stay the night here! she cried; I will go away the first thing in the morning! But no answer came; and after a few more efforts to win her aunt s attention, she turned away from the door into the dark night. The moon had not risen, and, except for the brightness of the stars, it was very gloomy. The town was, in those days, badly lighted with primitive oil lamps here and there in the public streets; the by-ways and unfrequented parts were in darkness. I will go to Juanita; she will take me in, I know, said Mariquita to herself, as she hurried along the dark, narrow alleys. So it is you, amiga! cried the matador s wife in a friendly voice, as she opened the door in answer to the girl s timorous ring. Why, child, how pale...
